The work of removing the snow from the streets of the city of Norwich has cost the city during the past six days nearly $2,900, and bide fair to reach the $2,500 mark before it is over. Street Commissioner Fox on Tuesday, evening stated that at a rough estimate the work of removing the snow had cost the city $300 per day, and would continue to do so for the next few days.

On Tuesday part of the men now employed by the street department were engaged in collecting ashes and garbage from the business district, but the operation was so difficult that Mr. Fox deemed it advisable not to attempt to collect the ashes from the residential districts for a few days.
